R- Rhetorical Question, Repetition, Register

E-Emotive Language

S- Simile, Structure

T- Triads (Listing three similar things), Tone (persuasive)

Okay, in speech it is usually to persuade and inform the audience.

I suggest using words like I, You and We in a varied manner.

By using We, you show that you are willing to be with the audience to reach a certain goal or an understanding about the particular topic you are discussing about.

We must use varied sentences, to keep it interesting.

For the voice, it is usually given in the question, if not, try to get clues from the passage or the bulleted points.

You must form a bond with your audience, make them FEEL.

IF THE QUESTION SAYS "EVALUATE" YOU HAVE THE RIGHT TO AGREE OR DISAGREE WITH THE TOPIC AND PERSUADE PEOPLE WHY YOUR OPINION SEEMS MORE VALID, BY PLACING MORE EVIDENCES!

TIPS:

- In speech, there should be short paragraphs as that will have more impact
- Number of paragraphs will depend on your collected points and how you structure them
- Use Imperative sentences
- Use Varied pronouns
- Use A-FOREST (You may google examples for each)
- Check for sample speeches online to get a feel of the format, if still in doubt

Introduction

- Capture's the audience's attention
- Start with yourself and why you are speaking
- Introduce yourself briefly
- Include an interesting fact or item of information about the topic
- Clearly state your opinion

Body

- Developing your main points and ideas
- Using rhetorical questions to engage your listeners
- What is your argument?(if argumentative style of speech)
- Acknowledgement of counter argument (If argumentative style of speech)
- If it is to persuade and inform, take evidences from the passage and paraphrase them, in order to support your point
- Use AFOREST to spicen up your speech, never ever bore your audience.

Conclusion

- A brief summing up of your topic
- Conclude the speech in a memorable manner that will make the audience understand
